Description

The early twenty-first century witnessed remarkable attempts by Africa’s political leadership to promote regional integration as a means of fast-tracking economic progress, facilitating peace and security, consolidating democratic gains, and promoting the general welfare of the African people. The transition of the Organization of Unity (OAU) to the African Union (AU), as well as the foisting of a new economic blueprint for the continent—the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD)—combined with the growing role of the regional economic communities (RECs) in harmonizing and creating subregional norms and standards in the political and economic arena suggest a new trend towards regionalism in Africa. Indeed, in the new regional integration architecture, the RECs are considered to be the building blocks of the integration process led by the AU. This new impetus of a regional development strategy was largely prompted by the slow pace of economic progress on the continent, the increasing marginalization of Africa in the global economy, and the need to create regional resources and standards that would benefit the continent in all spheres of social life. A painful realization became obvious that small micro-states in Africa sticking to their political independence and sovereignty would hardly make much progress in an increasingly globalised world. A macro-states approach of regional integration has assumed Africa’s new strategy to intervene in and integrate with a globalizing world.
The African Union and New Strategies for Development in Africa

Description (continued)

The current regional trend in Africa has received very little scholarly attention, especially in a systematic and comprehensive way. This is due partly to the fact that the processes are currently unfolding and there is still uncertainty as to the outcomes. Poor documentation and the dearth of primary materials (especially from the regional institutions) also contribute to the lack of scholarly work in this area. This study assembles the voices of some of the most seasoned African and Africanist scholars who have constantly, in one way or another, interacted with the integration process in Africa and kept abreast of the developments therein, and seeks to capture those developments in a nuanced manner in the economic, political, and social spheres. The essence of this book is to analyze those processes—teasing out the issues, problems, challenges, and major policy recommendations, with tentative conclusions on Africa’s regional development trajectory. The book, therefore, fills major knowledge and policy gaps in Africa’s regional development agenda.

The book constitutes a major reference work and compendium for a wide range of readers—students and scholars of African affairs and African development, policy makers both in Africa and the Western countries, regional and international institutions and organizations, and all those interested in the past, present, and future of Africa’s development process.
